

This map displays the priorities for increasing recreational opportunities as part of the Saving Places Index analysis. This recreation-based analysis first identified existing places for recreation important to the community. From this baseline, new opportunities for neighborhood parks, trails, and water access were prioritized. This stacked priority result is produced using a weighted sum analysis and highlights areas where individual recreational opportunities and needs overlap, offering multiple recreational opportunities. The individual recreational opportunities analyses identified places with potential for:

- Increasing neighborhood park access in high need areas
- Preserving open space for parks and recreation
- Increasing river access for water recreation
- Increasing rails-to-trails opportunities
